BIBLE CLASS HEAD SEEN AS FIGURE IN NORTH SIDE CHURCH SCANDAL

Nineteen-Year Old Myrtle Santay's Story May Involve
Reformer—Echo of Rev. Williams' Vice Squad
Raids Heard—Girl Clears Sensibaugh—
Church People Active

Interest in the case of Myrtle Santay, the young girl who first accused W. S. Sensibaugh, a former investigator for Elmer Williams, the pastor-vice-chaser of the north side, of a serious crime and then later withdrew her charges, has flared up again on the north side in the past few days.

Friends who believe in Sensibaugh's innocence insist he was a victim of a game that had its birth in the old days on North Clark street when Williams achieved a great deal of publicity by the manner in which he trapped women of the streets.

The testimony of the girl on the stand when the charges against Sensibaugh collapsed revealed that she had taken a trip to St. Louis in January with a man and had lived with him down there for one week.

This man is said to be a former head of a bible class of a north side church and a former member of a band of "reformers," who made a great stall of cleaning up vice on the north side.

Myrtle Santay's story is a strange one. It shows clearly the evil effect of using a girl as a decoy for men,
